Holiday Hedbanz cards

My students love playing "Hedbanz" by Spin Master Games and this game reinforces "questioning" and "inferring" two of the comprehension strategies we work on throughout the year. So, I decided to create the following cards for a "holiday" version of the game. Playing is quite simple. After dealing one card and three chips to each player, take your card and place it in your adjustable headband without peeking. When it's your turn, ask each player a question about who, or what, you are ("Am I a food?"). If you get stuck, the sample questions card offers tips on the types of questions you might ask. If you don't have the original game a variation would be for the child with the card to give clues to his/her classmates one clue at a time. Each child guesses what, where or who the person giving clues might be. If no one guesses after the first clue the child giving clues gives an additional clue to the group until someone guesses the correct answer.
